Q1	If you pay attention to your 'self', you can understand that you have various desires and thoughts. Provided below is a mind map of such a process. As per this mind map, your desires and thoughts are leading to your desire to make money. In another way, making money or resources is your basic aspiration. According to the UHV framework, this is a flawed representation. Your basic aspiration at the level of self is something else. Draw a different mind map about your desires and thoughts and show - towards what basic aspiration that these desires and thoughts leading to? You don't have to explain the diagram. Just draw it ensuring each bubble has the correct labels 	CO2	5

Q2	Ravi works in a company where he receives a large annual bonus. He decides to spend most of it on luxury items and personal entertainment, believing that buying more and more physical facilities is the true purpose of earning. His colleague, Meera, on the other hand, chooses to live very simply and saves almost all her money, avoiding even basic comforts, thinking that giving up desires is the right path. After some time, Ravi feels dissatisfied despite spending a lot, while Meera feels socially disconnected and emotionally restricted. Their workplace also notices that employees are competing rather than supporting each other, creating stress and imbalance. Question: In what way do indulgence and renunciation represent two extremes, and how can a balanced perspective help in ensuring prosperity for both self and society? Answering with relevant points and examples is appreciated instead of redundant writing.	CO1	5
Q3	Rohit is a final-year engineering student who believes that success in life primarily depends on earning a high salary, owning a comfortable house, and enjoying a luxurious lifestyle. He spends most of his time focusing on material achievements. Although he has adequate food, shelter, and access to modern comforts, he often feels anxious, disconnected from his family and friends, and dissatisfied despite meeting his physical needs. In contrast, during a community engagement programme, Rohit interacts with a village teacher who lives with limited material facilities but appears content, maintains harmonious relationships, and expresses clarity about purpose, responsibility, and ethical living. How does the UHV perspective distinguish animal consciousness from human consciousness in this case? Please Elaborate.	CO3	5
